COMMISSION AND BUREAU

By Herbert L. Swett

A few months ago the members of the Maine Development Commission and the Executive Committee of the Maine Publicity Bureau awoke to the fact that while we had been directing our energies in telling out of state people about the glories of Maine that our own folks had been neglected and that too many persons do not know what it is all about.

At several meetings of the very persons who should know most about our work, we asked the question: "How many know the difference between the Maine Development Commission and the Maine Publicity Bureau, and what part of Maine's recreational work is carried on by each?" It was surprising to find how few really did know. It must be our error that more do not. So this Spring and Summer we have been trying to tell more of our work WITHIN the state. Until this is better understood we cannot hope to receive the necessary support to carry out a complete recreational development.

The Maine Development Commission was created by the Legislature and has ten members of which the Governor is Chairman. The Commission has an office at the State House, holds one or two meetings monthly, and receives an annual appropriation of $50,000. This money is expended about as follows: advertising in national magazines and metropolitan newspapers, $30,000; booklets and distribution, $14,000; publicity, $3,000; Sportsman's shows, $1,000; and office expenses, $15,000. There is little left with which to use our imagination in advertising Maine.

In the last Legislature our appropriation was cut from $75,000 to $50,000, and in order to meet this situation and not reduce our newspaper and magazine advertising, we were reluctantly obliged to get along without an executive secretary, a publicity director, and to cut the office force to one person. In order to carry on at all and get out Maine Booklets, it was necessary to make a contract with the Maine Publicity Bureau to do this work at a reduced cost to the Commission. Our appropriation is totally inadequate for the work that we are doing, as I shall explain in future talks.

The Maine Publicity Bureau is a private corporation supported by the subscriptions of hotels and resorts, by banks, corporations and Maine Business men. Its work is to conduct an Information Bureau at Longfellow Square in Portland with Branch Bureaus at York and elsewhere. The Publicity Bureau receives the replies to the state advertising; it mails literature and answers the thousands of letters that are received from out of the state regarding Maine vacations. Information is given to tourists on their entrance to the State on road conditions, where to go, etc., and booklets are distributed for ALL hotels, camps, and resort sections. This information has always been truthfully and impartially given. The Bureau works for Maine AS A WHOLE, not for any section or resort or group of hotel men. It is important that this should be understood, as we have been unjustly accused of favoring some section or tourist route. Our funds are barely sufficient to carry on the essentials of our work.

The most important need of both organizations is a much larger appropriation by the Legislature for newspaper and magazine advertising. The appropriation to the Maine Development Commission should be increased by the next Legislature from $50,000 to $250,000, and this amount will be asked for. It's a lot of money for a big job, and it will all come back directly to the state in INCREASED gas taxes alone.

BETHEL MUSICIANS

The Bethel Musicians met on Tuesday of this week at Mrs. Brown's. The officers for the following year were elected. Prizes for the best work during the last year were awarded to the following: Maynard Austin, first prize; Gary York, second; and Emma Blake, the third. The composer studied was Robert Schumann. A sketch of his life was given by Emma Blake. She then played Sunbeams At Play. The club members sang Springtime in the Rockies accompanied by Irene Blake. Refreshments were then served.

BETHEL BLANKS OXFORD HERE

The locals snapped out of what the bleacher managers had begun to think was a losing streak to shut out the invading Oxford team 8-0 Wednesday afternoon. Custer Quimby pitched great ball, and the rest of the players were in just as good form. Doc Hood tapped out a home run with a man on second, and Ted Swan laid two long ones into the dormitory for two two baggers. Bob Goddard stopped a hot liner then steamed it to Ralph Young for a double play. The star half-pint-sized second baseman, BETHEL

LOCAL TEAM HAS BUSY WEEK COMING

On Saturday, Aug. 4, Mechanic Falls invades the local diamond for their third tussle with Bethel. Bethel having been beaten twice by them by the scores of 3-0 with Hobert pitching and 10-9 the last game, are out for revenge and if Whitman is in form local fans can be assured of a real game.

On Wednesday, Aug. 8, the fast stepping hard hitting West Paris will be in town and again Bethel boys will be out for revenge with Custer Quimby toting the slab for the sake of Bethel.

On Sunday, Aug. 5, Bethel journeys to Dixfield where they will lock horns with the fast Dixfield crew. Harlow, a native of Dixfield, but a business man of the town now, will endeavor to silence the bats of his former team-mates.

HERE AND THERE IN MAINE

Severe drought conditions throughout the State have dried the streams so that game wardens have been engaged in transferring trout to deep pools. More than 2,000 trout were baled in one day by Earle F. Kelley of Hallowell.

Two per cent of the Quernseys in America may be found in the State of Maine.

Governor Brann reports that Cumberland County will receive $238,243.50 of the $1,700,000 federal road allotment.

Prolonged drought conditions came to an end when over four inches of rain fell in a two days downpour, July 27 and 28. The water storage situation is now excellent.

On July 29, the 103d Infantry, Maine National Guard, passed in review before Governor Brann. An estimated crowd of over 10,000 watched these maneuvers at Camp Keyes, Augusta.

Rev. David B. Holt, D. D., a pioneer worker in Methodism in Maine, died at his home in South Portland on July 28. Dr. Holt was 78 years old.

Motor vehicle registration receipts for the first six months of the year totaled $2,337,079, an increase of $293,123 over the similar period of last year, the Secretary of States office disclosed.

FARM PRODUCE BIG ITEM IN STATE'S SUMMER TRADE

The summer Recreational Business offers a fine market for the Maine Farmer. The Maine Development Commission said today that the farmers of the state receive $2,400,000 for farm produce supplied to the summer residents, and to the hotels and camps. This amount could be much larger if the farmers would make more of an effort to supply this market.

The hotel and camp owners say that they would much prefer to use Maine farm produce if they could get it in the right quality and quantity. It has been found that only a comparatively few farmers understand how to supply this vast market right at our door. The average hotel or camp owner likes to get his poultry or his green beans or peas all from one source. He cannot bother to buy a few from this one and a few from that one. If one farmer would take one hotel and supply it with green peas, another farmer furnish the poultry, etc., it would mean keeping more money in Maine.

With the Maine farmer studying how to take advantage of this market and the anticipated increase in the summer business, we can expect a much larger sum of money going to our farmers.

CHILDREN'S NIGHT AT BEAR RIVER GRANGE

Bear River Grange observed Children's Night Saturday, July 28. After a short business meeting a pleasing program was presented. Recitations were given by Amy Bennett Leona Tripp, Richard Bennett, Mary Stearns and Virginia Blake. A piano solo and encore were rendered by Ina Bean. C. F. Saunders told the children about some of the things he saw on his trip to Florida last winter. Games in charge of Miss Carrie Wight were enjoyed by the children. Closing songs were "America the Beautiful," "Jingle Bells" and "Good Night Ladies" after which all retired to the dining room where ice cream, cake and cookies were served to about 25 children and 26 members. The next meeting will be Ladies' Night.

THE OTHER SIDE

This editorial taken from The Bridgton News presents an interesting opinion which deserves consideration when we would kick about the automobile taxes:

Every once in awhile some automobile association or kindred organization breaks into print with the complaint that the motorists are being "soaked." This time it is the American Automobile Association which has just made public a recent survey. It figures that the average value of cars on the highway in 1933 was something like $160.34 each and that the average tax was $51.29, counting registration licence fees, gas tax, excise tax, etc. Of course it is the province of automobile associations to make an endeavor to have this tax decreased, which is a worthy object. On the other hand it must be borne in mind that the automobile is of untold expense to the state and to the municipality. Everyone who builds a camp in the back woods expects the town or the state to construct a three lane, hard surfaced boulevard to the front door, regardless of cost. The old winding dirt roads of the horse and buggy days are way out of date. Control of these thousands upon thousands of vehicles on the highway calls for huge expenditures for police protection, etc., etc. While the automobile owner does not bear this entire expense by any manner of means it is only right that he should stand the greater part of it because it is the automobile user who demands all these costly improvements and who wears out the roads once they have been constructed. The automobile has brought much to the country town, but by the same token it has sapped the very life blood out of these small villages and hamlets. The cry of "soaking the motorist" is a popular one because nearly everybody has a car but we doubt if in the final analysis the facts would justify the stand which is being taken by automobile clubs in various parts of the country. It is the automobile that has been responsible for the great burden of additional taxes and it is the automobile that should pay.

CAPT. DANIEL GODFREY

Military burial services were held at Woodland Cemetery Tuesday afternoon for Captain Daniel Godfrey, U. S. A., retired, who passed away in Boston Thursday night, after an illness of four months. Members of the local Legion post attended in a body, as well as members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the firing squad of Jackson-Silver Post of Locke Mills. A military funeral was held in Boston.

Captain Godfrey was born in England 70 years ago, but over 50 years ago joined the United States army. He saw service in Cuba, the Philippines and in the World War in France. He married Mrs. Nora Coburn Merrill, formerly of Bethel, who survives him.

GORHAM NORMAL SCHOOL

In an address at Assembly recently Dr. Russell announced the following news of interest. The Federal Emergency Relief Administration has decided to continue part-time aid to college students during the entire next school year on a somewhat larger scale. This means for the Gorham Normal School that the Federal program students to earn from $10 to $20 will provide for 12 per cent of the per month by part-time work. This opportunity to earn will be based upon (a) need, (b) character, and (c) ability to do normal school work. This aid will be equitably divided between the sexes. This program will enable some students to continue in the normal school, and others to enter, who without this aid would find it impossible to do so.

Everett Cole and Everett Davis were at Prout's Neck on Sunday.

Mrs. Dorothy Tucker was the guest of Miss Ruth Bangs at Brunswick over the week end.

Miss Hazel Grover spent Saturday and Sunday at her home.

Miss Iva Bartlett was the week end guest of friends in Portland.

Many enjoyed a hike and picnic supper at Fort Hill on Thursday. A game of soft-ball between the East Hill and the Commuters furnished much amusement.

THE OXFORD COUNTY CITIZEN
Bethel, MaineREMINISCENCES
EAST STONEHAM
By J. N. COLE

On the road leading over Bodwell's bridge, of which more anon: were two schoolhouses, then farther up, one school-house (a more extended notice later) then the cross road to Sawyer's Pond. To the right and left the Allen neighborhood. Sewell Butter's on the right, then George Allen on the left. And down to the end of the road the old Eliza Allen farm occupied by Ashbel Allen, his son. On the road from Bodwell Bridge above the school-house was Mr. Smith's house later occupied by Levi McAllister, acclaimed the first steam engineer at Barker's mills. Doctor Manning had a farm farther on and nearly opposite was a house occupied by Albion Stearns, the village blacksmith, and a farm on the other side of the road several rods down the hill from the road leading to the Allen farms was occupied by Edmund Barker, who at one time was the school committee. Then beyond Dr. Manning's farm (a half mile or so) was the Al. Moody place, who occupied it for a number of years with his family. They moved away and in the late 70's it was owned and occupied by Enoch Bartlett for some time. This farm was situated at the end of the school district. Elbridge Evans had a farm on the right of the corner beyond the first school building, not far from Sawyer's mill.

On the main street in the 60's (and before) on the right hand side was Geo. Annis, an old lady named Aunt Floyd or Flood, Summer Evans' store and postoffice, Orris Parker, mine host at the village Tavern run later by James (Jim) Parker, then the next place was the residence of A. Seavey later occupied by John S. Littlefield. Then came the place first occupied by Mark Ham, later by Milton (Mill) Parker and his wife, Christ. Farther on was Nelson Russell and a Mr. Flanders, and No. 3 school-house. This and the above two houses were built in the late 70's. Then came the farm occupied by John Howe after he sold his mill, and later by Daniel Merrill. Then the adjoining farm of Joe Ricker on the corner came next. This is one of the interesting places in town, as across the road from the farm-house is an old private burying-ground of the Bodwell's. One of the family became famous as the Governor of the State of Maine. And near by one of the few bridges (Bodwell's), situated just outside the village proper. The next place on Main Street, some distance away, was a small house occupied at one time by a cobbler. Then the next was the Thomas D. Foster place. Beyond that was the Sawyer estate (one of the pioneer places) and away up beside the pond was a small farm at one time occupied by Edward Small.

We'll now notice the places from the old Howe mill (later called Brown's Mill). The first place was the old set of buildings owned and occupied by Sumner Evans, P. M. This was the largest building in the village at one time, consisting of a barn, dwelling house and open shed with a tenement overhead, and at one end was fixed up a part suitable for a store, all connected. But now all that remains of the place is a memory, as it was destroyed by fire February 2d, 1872, at about four o'clock in the morning, with a heavy loss. George Seavey and wife occupied the tenement over the shed at the time.

In a few short months Mr. Evans rebuilt on a smaller scale, and having in due time given over the store to his older son, Ingalls Evans, he retained the U. S. mail at the house using the pantry containing the dry sink as the post-office. Previous to this time the next place was occupied by Elijah Russell and his wife, Mary. Then later by his son, Nelson. And later by Mr. Evan's son, Ingalls. Then a short distance back from the Main Street dwelt Moses Seavey. Prior to 1870 it became the property of Lorenzo N. Cole and family, and later by George Annis by reason of exchange (about 1875). From the private road were some old buildings, some of which were moved away or went to decay. The next was an old house, at one time occupied by E. Small, and years after by a Mr. Ricker, brother to Joe. Then upstream from Bodwell bridge was a sawmill, the old Mark Ham mill, and house, the house occupied by Bent Bartlett. Then up beside the Sawyer Pond was an unidentified farm with a cellar hole and no buildings.

Edible Figs

There are two types of edible figs.

One type will develop fruit without pollination and includes the White Adriatic, Black Mission and Kadota.

The other type requires pollination and includes chiefly those called Calmyrna, Stanford and San Pedro.

Figs are insect-pollinated plants, the pollen-bearing flowers and the edible fruit being borne on different trees.

The male tree is known as the caprifig. The staminate flowers which bear the pollen are just inside the eye, and the gall flowers, which are modified female flowers, occupy the rest of the cavity of the fruit.

First Theater in Capital

Aside from occasional performances given in Blodgett's hotel, which was at the southwest corner of Eighth and B streets, northwest, Washington had no playhouse in its first years.

In 1803 a number of citizens met at Tunnick's tavern and planned the erection of the first theater in the city. It was built in 1804 on the northeast corner of Eleventh and C streets, and known as the Washington theater.

Tunnick's was on the southeast corner of Ninth and Pennsylvania, southeast, and was founded in 1706.—Washington Star.

Attraction of Earth

It has been calculated that were an object to be thrown from the earth with a velocity of five miles per second it would leave the earth entirely and become a satellite of the earth.

If the velocity were increased beyond five miles per second the object would continue to revolve around the earth in an elliptical orbit, whose width would increase with the velocity until a velocity of seven miles a second was recorded, when the object would fly off on a parabolic curve, escaping the attraction of the earth and becoming a satellite of the sun.

Ducks Are Vegetarians

All wild ducks are at least 90 per cent vegetarians in their food habits, according to the United States bureau of biological survey.

When ducks dive, scientists of the bureau declare, they are almost always going after rootstalks and the tubers of aquatic plants, or seeds that have sunk to the bottom.

The animal food that wild ducks do consume consists of worms, insects, snails and crayfish—very seldom fish.

SEASONAL ACCIDENT HAZARDS

The National Safety Council observes that the accident rate keeps up with the thermometer. With the coming of summer, all types of accidents, ranging from life-destroying automobile collisions to cases of sunburn, tend to increase.
A little common-sense will solve the problem these "seasonal hazards" present. When you go camping, repair axes, knives and other sharp implements with the respect they deserve—and in case you are cut or scratched attend to it at once. Many a person has died needlessly from infections resulting from minor injuries. And remember that sunburn can also be a killer, and that over-exercise after a year spent in an office chair amounts to holding out an invitation to the doctor—and possibly the mortician. There are obvious precautions that must be taken when it comes to swimming and other summer diversions and sports.
The automobile, of course, remains the greatest hazard of all. In summer roads are dry, the weather is fine—and the speed demon is likely to take command. The potential danger involved in this cannot be over-emphasized. Excess speed—which can be simply defined as going faster than traffic and highway conditions of the moment justly—take more lives and does more economic damage than any other driving error. Don't forget that the time-saving a few minutes of excessive speed may cost you your life—and that it may bring summer to an end for you and your family for all time.

lease. It has a corps of 125 lawyers and its payroll now calls for $300,000 a month.

Why Not?

Quebec Is Oldest Walled City in North America

Quebec, the ancient capital, is the oldest walled city on the continent of North America, observes a writer in the Montreal Herald. No place name in the country carries with it so much of the historic or the picturesque. Historians do not agree as to its meaning, but the most generally accepted theory is that it is derived from an Indian word meaning "where the river narrows."

Champlain founded the city in 1608 and the story of its growth is indefinitely linked with the early history of Canada.
The historic Citadel crowns its heights, 365 feet above the river, and from these cliffs the city slopes down to tide water level at the St.
Charles river. Though the city has kept astride of modern progress it is visited annually by thousands of travelers who carry away memories of its ancient buildings, and old world streets replete of the colorful scenes of an earlier day.

It has an ocean port with docks capable of accommodating the large ocean liners. Near where the great ocean liners dock Wolfe landed in the darkness with his army to take the city from the French.
Not far from there the first seagoing steamer ever built in Canada was launched. It was the Royal William, the first ship to cross the Atlantic using steam all the way.

Potato Not Irish

Ireland is not the home of the Irish potato. Its original home was western South America where it was found and taken to Europe by explorers who were in search of gold. The potato did not win immediate favor in Europe. War, famine and kindly decrees first were necessary before it gained popularity. In Scotland, it was considered for many years the forbidden fruit that got Adam and Eve into everlasting disgrace.

Transits of Venus and When Phenomena Occur

If the orbits of Venus, the earth and the sun were all in the same plane, a transit of Venus—her apparent passage across the face of the sun—would occur once in every 224 days, the time in which Venus takes to make the circuit of her orbit. But, says a writer in Cleveland Plain Dealer, owing to the different inclinations of these orbits it only happens at long intervals, that when Venus passes one of her nodes—or points at which her orbit intersects that of the earth—she is in a direct line between the earth and the body of the sun.

The earth passes the line of these nodes, respectively, on or about December 7 and June 6, so that transits can only occur near these dates. Usually a pair of trans-its occur near one of these dates with an interval of eight years between; then 243 years must elapse before a transit can fall upon the same date again. But near the middle of this period—not exactly the middle, because neither Venus nor the earth travels quite uniformly in its orbit—one or two transits will occur at the other date.

There was a transit December 8, 1874, and another December 2, 1882, and another pair of December trans-its will not occur for 243 years—in 2117 and 2125; but during this period two June transits will occur, in the years 2004 and 2012.

IN SCHOOL-DAYS

John Greenleaf Whittier

Still sits the schoolhouse by the road,
A ragged beggar sunning;
Around it still the sumachs grow,
And blackberry vines are running.

Within, the master's desk is seen,
Deep scarred by raps official;
The warping floor, the battered seats,
The jack-knife's carved initial;

The charcoal frescoes on the wall;
It's door's worn sill, betraying
The feet that, creeping slow to school,
Went storming out to playing.

Long years ago a winter sun
Shone over it at setting,
Lit up its western window-panes,
And low eaves' icy fretting.

It touched the tangled golden curls,
And brown eyes full of grieving,
Of one who still her steps delayed
When all the school was leaving.

For near her stood the little boy
Her childish favor singled,
His cap pulled low upon a face Where pride and shame were mingled.

Pushing with restless feet the snow
To right and left, he lingered;
As restlessly her tiny hands
The blue checked Apron fingered.

He saw her lift her eyes; he felt
The soft hands light caressing,
And heard the tremble of her voice,
As if a fault confessing.

"I'm sorry that I spelt the word;
I hate to go above you.
Because," the brown eyes lower told—
"Because, you see, I love you."

Still memory to a gray-haired man
That sweet child face is showing,
Dear girl the grasses on her grave
Have forty years been growing.

He lives to learn in life's hard school
How few who pass above him
Lament their triumph and his loss,
Like her,—because they love him.

ATHEISM

Arthur Hugh Clough

"There is no God," the wicked saith,
"And truly it's a blessing,
For what he might have done with us
It's better only guessing."

"There is no God," a youngster thinks,
"Or really if there may be,
He surely didn't mean a man Always to be a baby."

"Whether there be," the rich man
thinks,
"It matters very little,
For I and mine, thank somebody,
Are not in want of victual."

Some others also to themselves
Who scarce so much as doubt it, Think there is none, when they are well,
And do not think about it.

But country-folks who live beneath
The shadow of the steeple;
The parson, and the parson's wife,
And mostly married people;

Youths green and happy in first love,
So thankful for illusion;
And men caught out in what the world
Calls guilt and first confusion;

And almost everyone when age,
Disease, and sorrow strike him,— Inclines to think there is a God,
Or something very like him.

SOUR MILK

Miss Wood, Foods Specialist
the University of Maine, gives some timely hints for the use of sour milk. She says:

"This is the time of year when milk sours easily and sometimes wasted on that account. But milk is good food and should not be thrown away. Some of the cooks make the milk sour so it can use it for special things.

"Clabber, or honny clabber, curd as sour milk is sometimes called is very good for breakfast served with sweet cream or milk and sugar. It is a delicious summer dessert with fruit or serves if you have them. When in this manner it must not sour too much—just enough the milk to set.

"For quick breads, however, some kinds of cakes, sour clab-ber is just as good. Many prefer it sweet milk for biscuits, griddle cakes, corn bread, muffins, bread, waffles, gingerbread, cake,
or devil's cake.

"When used in cooking, milk must be neutralized by In doughs or batters, it can substituted for equal quantities sweet milk if you use the same quantity of Soda. The proportions are one-half level teaspoon of to each cup of sour clabbered or a quarter teaspoon of soda if milk is just turning. The should be mixed with the flour other dry ingredients, so it will begin to act until it is in the or dough. For thin batters, soda and sour milk usually mish enough leavening, but thick batters or doughs take powder, is usually needed too.

For griddle cakes, for instance, in place of one cup of sweet milk and two teaspoons of baking powder, use one cup of sour clabbered milk and one-half level teaspoon soda with no baking powder. The quantity of soda is right for sour milk, and with the milk is practically equivalent in leavening power to the two teaspoons baking powder. For biscuit dough, however, where you would use cup of milk and four teaspoons baking powder, substitute one cup of sour clabbered milk, one-level teaspoon of soda, and two spoons of baking powder.

"Sour milk has a soft curd

BETHEL DROPS ONE

Monday Bryant Pond invaded the local field and did a good job of wrapping it up and taking it to the tune of 12-4. Wally can pitched good ball, striking five men, but it wasn't good enough. Bethel's big inning was sixth, when Fred Scribner hit two men on bases for a three run one up past the dormitory. He took a nap off third immediately afterwards but he came back in two runs. The sensational play of the day was when Morgan caught one that he threw over, and threw it down to Scribner on first, who checked a couple of yards to the barehanded, putting the game out.

The game was featured by razzing and unsportsmanlike razzing of Bethel team from its own bench, which was for the most part undeserved.

Products of Casein

Cow's milk contains about 4 percent of casein. Skim milk is into vats, a little sour milk or lactic acid bacteria added and it is allowed to ferment undisturbed is complete. Then the liquid is run off, the curd pressed into cakes and dried. There are two principal processes for the manufacture of casein. In one of them, the casein is dissolved in ammonia or an alkali, then dyestuffs, pigments or colors are added to give the right color. A coagulant such as an acid is added. In the dry process, the curd is powdered and mixed with dyestuffs, then put through extruding machines or heated calendar which convert the powder by means of heat and pressure into rods or masses. This is then dried by means of formaldehyde is seasoned by drying.

PICKED TEAM BEATS BETHEL

On Sunday, July 29, Bethel journeyed down to Sumner where they met defeat to the tune of 6-3 at the hands of a combination of West Paris, Woodstock and Sumner players. Bethel was scheduled to play at 2 p. m. but because some of the cars got lost in finding the field had to wait until the first game was over which made it a very tedious afternoon.

Harlow, Bethel's speed ball artist, was in great form after the first inning and but for some very lucky hits and stops by Sumner he would have won the game as he allowed only seven hits and struck out 12 men. Goddard and Daniels led the hitting attack with three hits apiece, one a home run by Goddard. Curtis of West Paris, catching for Sumner, played an excellent game for the locals.

Source of Given Names

Old Greek and Roman mythology was the source of many given names in use today. Others hark back to the lusty pursuits of the Teutons. The Kelts, on the other hand, made much of the varying shades of complexion among themselves, and thus names derived from that language frequently refer to "the swarthy," "the ruddy," "the white," etc. In almost all tongues, words meaning bright, clear, famous, strong, kind, and so forth, were made the roots for various names, dozens of which still are in common use.

Where a slip means death!

MOST AMAZING PROOF EVER KNOWN OF EXTRA TRACTION AND NON-SKID SAFETY

UP . . . UP . . . UP . . . to 14,000 feet above sea-level! Skirting yawning chasms, tearing around 181 treacherous turns at breath-taking speeds, daredevil drivers fight their way up, grinding, pounding, swaying! In the annual Pike's Peak Race, where a slip means death, Firestone High Speed Tires were on the winning car. Surely this is the most amazing proof ever known of Extra Traction—Non-Skid Safety—and Dependability.

The new Firestone High Speed Tires for 1934 have the toughest, longest wearing tread Firestone has ever made. They have a wider tread of flatter contour, deeper non-skid, more and tougher rubber, giving you more than 50% longer non-skid mileage.

Every cotton fiber inside every cord is soaked and coated with Extra Rubber—eight additional pounds absorbed by every 100 pounds of cotton cords. This is Gum-Dipping, the Firestone patented process that provides extra Blowout Protection.

BETHEL, MAINE

SOUTH WOODSTOCK

Sunday, July 29—"Praise God from whom all blessings flow" for this most beautiful of many beautiful days.

The earth was parched and dry. Mother Nature cried for rain. The flood gates of heaven were opened. The prayers of His children were answered. Far be it for us to complain when countless millions were suffering worse than we in our New England States, but previous to the blessed rainfall of July 27 and 28, the general outlook of all vegetables was alarming from the effects of the long drouth.

Gerald Davis has finished cutting the hay on the Henry Whitman farm. The amount cut on the place this season estimated about 10 tons. At the time of the decease of Mr. Whitman some fifteen years ago the place was known to yield some 30 tons of marketable hay.

David Randolph has a new automobile a present from his mother, who came from Massachusetts to visit her son's family quite recently.

Mrs. Mildred Woodsum and sons, Sidney Perham and George Albert of Sanguis, Mass., are visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Quimby Perham at the Perham homestead.

Mrs. Mollie Perham, R. N., at this writing is caring for a patient, a Mr. Ritchie, in Portland.

Miss Dorothea Billings of this town, a teacher of South Portland, was calling on friends recently while introducing a student friend who was collecting for a magazine the benefits derived to be used for a local social club.

Albert Felt was at this place on Sunday morning, July 27th, and made a social visit of an hour or so with his sister, Mrs. Eliza Felt Davis, and family at Davis homestead.

The hateful old cow wandered around and ate up my entire bed of pansies, my pet horse reached over the fence and nipped off the topmost branches of my favorite rosebush. I have purchased another lot of pansies. Perhaps the rosebush needed pruning.

Ernest Packard, who has been living at Harland Andrews' during the last school year is spending his vacation with his father, James Packard at Bryant Pond.

Mrs. Clarabel Randolph is caring for the four small children of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Appleby while Mrs. Appleby is spending some time with friends in Portland.

Mrs. Bernice Radcliff Davis has been entertaining her stepmother, Mrs. Dione and son, Herman, of Portland, during the past week.

Mrs. Velma Davis has been assisting at the delicatessen and ice cream parlor for Stephen Davis of Bryant Pond several days of last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Davis of North Conway, N. H., have purchased the garage formerly occupied by Leblanc of Bryant Pond. Mr. Davis is now moving his family to Bryant Pond where he will open up this garage for public patronage. Mr. Davis has a wide experience as a garageman having been in the business for many successful years.

South Woodstock is surely on the map. With our up-to-date, remodeled school building and now annex we are justifiably proud. This with our new road construction project. We have come to feel puffed up.

A. M. Andrews and ladies in company with his brother, Frank Andrews and wife, spent several days with Rev. Bert Young and wife of Portland recently.

All in bustle and stir since early this morning. Much planning and preparation has been going on. For late last night the consent of Chief Big Gun had been given for another attack on the fierce Red of Redding. Many years ago a fierce encounter was fought by the Indian tribes living there at that time, from this traditional descent, the ferocity of the Red has terrorized the surrounding country. The Braves of Molly Gekott were victorious at a previous battle, July 22. When an Indian is licked he's out but never down. A defeat is seldom recognized and only annihilation spells his doom. The trail over the mountain was made by the spies, bow and arrow men of the Braves. Those bearing the old flintlocks took a more circuitous route. Huge trucks, "Pat's" special and "And's" reliable, conveyed large loads of the tribal band. At this late hour Brave Roberts has not reported. Was he lost in battle? Who won the victory?

India's Red Jungle Fowl

May Be Daddy of Chicken

The red jungle fowl, of India, is believed to be the ancestor of all of our strains of domestic chickens, says a writer in the Detroit News. Perhaps one reason for its domestication is the fact that in its native range, along the slopes and valleys of the Himalayas, it shows a preference for living fairly near to small villages rather than in deep jungles. A famous naturalist and explorer states that it might better be named bamboo fowl than jungle fowl because it is especially fond of this type of vegetation and is usually found in a vicinity where bamboo grows.

The chief difference in appearance between the wild jungle fowl and its domesticated cousin is a matter of carriage. The real wild jungle fowl cock carries his tail low, walks with slightly bent legs and low head, always in an attitude of listening and watching; in marked contrast to the erect carriage, high held tail and strutting gait of the domesticated cock.

The crow of the jungle fowl so closely resembles that of the common barnyard fowl that he states he has more than once unconsciously withheld his fire when a bird he had been stalking suddenly uttered the familiar barnyard sound.

Hyrax Is Nearest Known

Kin to Elephant Family

Those scientists who make it their business to probe into nature's secrets are continually surprising and startling us with the assertions they make from time to time, but none of their declarations seem much more difficult to believe than that the hyrax, and closely related species of the same animal, are the nearest known living relatives of the elephant. The hyrax is also called coney, or dassie in South Africa.

In shape and size the hyrax resembles a large rabbit except for its somewhat rat-like head, and unlike the rabbit it does not hop but walks or runs, using its legs separately.

Anatomical studies made by zoologists have established the relationship existing between this unimpressive animal and the lordly elephant, the burden of proof lying in a comparison of the skeletal structure of their feet. Paleontologists have done their part by declaring that ancestors of the two that existed during the Secondary epoch in geological time were themselves descended from the same line of ancestors. These are known to scientists as the Moeritherium and the Megalohyrax. The Moeritherium, ancestor of the elephant, has been described as a clumsy animal, somewhat tapir-like in appearance and size, with only the barest suggestion of a proboscis. The Megalohyrax, ancestor of the hyrax, which is believed to belong to the same epoch in time as the Moeritherium, was also about the same size. Comparison of the elephant and the hyrax with fossil specimens of these far distant relations indicates that the elephant has increased in size since the time which they represent at about the same rate at which the hyrax has lost in stature.—Detroit News.

ROBBERS' ROOST

By ZANE GREY

COPYRIGHT W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Jim Wall, young son of a ranchman, in the days of the cattle industry, a new field in Utah. He meets Hays, who admits to being a robber, and tells Wall he is working for an Englishman named Herrick who has located a big ranch in the mountains. Herrick has a small army of rustlers and others, and Hays and others are willing to steal their employer's money. Hays wants Wall to join in with the rustlers.

CHAPTER II.—At the little settlement of Green River, Hays gets into an argument with a gambler named Stud over a poker game. Wall's life is bluffed by the rustlers. With Hays and other rustlers, Happy Jack and Jim Wall start out for Hays' ranch. In camp, the first night, Jim regrets the step he has taken, but it is too late to turn back.

CHAPTER III.—The four men arrive at the ranch. Herrick announces his sister, Helen, is coming to see him. Hays unfolds his plan of possession of the 12,000 head of live stock on the Herrick ranch. He and his lieutenants ride to drive off the first bunch of cattle. Hays remains behind to shoot if necessary, with Heese-man, a rival among the cattle rustlers. Jim sees a dust cloud, which denotes the arrival of a man and his gang. He stands ready.

CHAPTER IV.—Heese-man tells Hays was once his (Heese-man's) partner and double-crossed him. He delegates Jim to go to the Herrick ranch to meet Miss Helen. Hays gets Barnes, a young cowboy, to tell her that he is a desperado of the worst kind. Hays does so, and later Jim tells her what is known as a "man," but the girl treats the rustler lightly.

CHAPTER V.—On his arrival at the ranch, with Helen, Jim is confronted by Hays, who betrays an interest in the coming of Miss Helen. Hays tells Hays that Miss Helen brought a large sum of money. Jim, riding with the Herricks and impressing Helen with his shooting.

CHAPTER VI

That day Herrick did not accompany his sister on the daily ride. A circumstance which, if any, gave freer rein to her spirit. Her concern for her safety. He did not judge well of her horse-riding because of the side-saddle. Bluntly he disapproved of a thing and said it was worse than the "pancake" her father rode. But she rode after her father just the same, and held on until she was thrown. She had fallen upon rocks or hard ground she would have been seriously injured, if not killed. But when the horse stumbled and she fell, she was off at once. Jim was off at once. The instant she struck, "All—right," spoke up Miss Helen, weakly. "I came—a crop—didn't I?"

sat, evidently not hurt. She clung to Jim's arm. Her face, aware that his hand was steady. Her hair had come loose to fall in a golden mass over her shoulder. She rearranged it on her hat, deftly despite the danger.

"Shore, haven't I kept them workin' up here. But I've no control over this horseback ridin' after hounds. Pretty soon Herrick will be chasin' down Limestone way. Then the fire'll be out."

"Hank, he wouldn't know the difference," interposed Jim. "Aw, I don't care," replied Hays, harshly, and that finally intimidated much. "Wait till Smoky's outfit shows up?"

Every morning when Jim rode down to the corral he fell back under the spell of something sweeter than wine. The sunny hours with the sage flat ahead, the fragrant pines, the baying hounds, and always out in front this bright-haired like to run a horse. It's dangerous. I shall have to speak to your brother."

"Don't. I've never ridden astride, but I'll do it, since you are so very fearful about it."

That experience left Jim shaky, probably a good deal shakier than it had left Miss Herrick. But it was not fear for her. Jim revealed in the torturing sensation engendered by contact with this beautiful girl. He shook like a leaf at the staggering realization that when she lay on the ground with her arms spread wide, her hair gold against the sand, her longed to snatch her to his breast. A natural impulse, under the circumstances, but for him—idiotic!

Miss Herrick took to the Western saddle like a duck to water. She could ride. Moreover, that spirit of which she had hinted certainly overtook her. More than once she ran off alone, riding like the wind; and upon one of these occasions it took the cowboys till dark to find her. That with Hank Hays and Heese-man there to see her gallop away—unescorted! Herrick did not seem to mind.

As far as Jim Wall was concerned, however, these rides with her centered him upon the love which had come to consume him; and the several she took alone were more torturing because they aroused fear of Hank Hays. It could not be ascertained whether or not Hays followed her, but when the day came that Jim discovered Hays had been riding the trails frequented by Miss Herrick, it seemed time to act.

This placed Jim in a worse quandary. To act, for a man of his training at such a time and place, was to do only one thing. But how could he kill his leader upon mere suspicion of sinister intent to kidnap the girl? It was a predicament for a man who had always played fair, alike to honest friend and crooked ally.

Jim paced under the dark sheltering trees, in the dead of night, when he should have been sleeping. Days had passed without his once seeking to avoid disaster; and he had not sought it because he knew it was no use. To wish to be with his blond girl seemed irresistible. More than once he had caught himself in the spell of a daring impulse—to tell Miss Herrick that he loved her. The idea was sheer madness. Yet the thought persisted, and when he tried to shake it the result was it grew stronger in a haunting maddening way.

At breakfast next morning Hays raved about the fact that Smoky had not been there for over two weeks. "Things air comin' to a head," he concluded, gloomily.

"Teckon they ought to have made two drives by now," rejoined Happy Jack. "I rid down the valley yesterday eight or ten miles. Cattle thinned out, boss. Any cowboy with eyes in the back of his head would be on to us by now."

"Shore, haven't I kept them workin' up here. But I've no control over this horseback ridin' after hounds. Pretty soon Herrick will be chasin' down Limestone way. Then the fire'll be out."

"Hank, he wouldn't know the difference," interposed Jim.

"Aw, I don't care," replied Hays, harshly, and that finally intimidated much. "Wait till Smoky's outfit shows up?"

Every morning when Jim rode down to the corral he fell back under the spell of something sweeter than wine. The sunny hours with the sage flat ahead, the fragrant pines, the baying hounds, and always out in front this bright-haired girl, were vastly different from the dark hours when the day was done. In moments of humility, engendered by the higher emotions this girl aroused, Jim clasped to his breast the fact that he was protecting her from worse men.

Barnes and another of the cowboys had taken the horses for the Herricks up to the house. To Jim's honest dismay he espied Helen riding ahead, with the cowboys behind leading her brother's mount. Herrick was not coming.

Miss Herrick looked far less proud and unattainable in the boy's riding garb she had adopted. Moreover, it had transformed her, yet her femininity appeared more provocatively manifest than ever.

Barnes turned Herrick's horse over to a stable boy, and with his companion fell in behind Miss Herrick, who rode out upon the valley. Jim rejoined them, and they trotted their horses together.

"Why didn't Herrick come?" asked Jim.

"He was rowin' with Heese-man," replied Barnes, soberly.

"You don't say! What about?"

"Teckon I don't know. They shet up as I come along," returned the cowboy. "But I seen enough to calculate somethin's wrong. They was on the porch. Herrick looked sort of peevish. He didn't want his sister to go huntin' today, I heard that. An' she said right pert she was goin'."

"How did Heese-man look?" went on Jim, ponderingly.

"Dead serious, like he was tryin' to persuade the boss to somethin'."

Jim lapsed into silence. What turn would affairs take next? It was getting warm around Star ranch.

Three or four miles out the hounds jumped a coyote from a clump of sagebrush.

The cowboys took the lead, then came Miss Herrick, while Jim brought up the rear. It was a long, gradual ascent up to an open ridge.

Here the hounds jumped a herd of deer. Despite the yelling of the cowboys they dashed up the ridge with a chorus of wild yelps and barks. They all passed out of hearing.

Jim caught up with Miss Herrick, who waited in an open spot among the pines. Flushed and disheveled, with her sombrero on the pommel, panting from the arduous ride, she made a distracting picture.

"Hunt's off for us, Miss Herrick," said Jim.

"Too bad! But wasn't—it fun—while it lasted?" she replied gayly. "Let us rest the horse. I'm out of breath myself."

Jim dismounted to tighten his saddle cinches.

"Wall, take a look at my cinches," she said.

"May I ask you not to call me Wall? I must remind you I'm no butler."

"Pray pardon me," she rejoined, in surprise. "I presume I should address you as Mr. Wall?"

"Yes, if you're too stuck up to call me Jim," he said.

She lifted her chin and deigned no reply. And that infuriated him.

"While I'm at it I'll tell you this, too," he went on doggedly. "You must not ride around alone again. I've had no chance to speak with you. But I told your brother. He laughed in my face. He is a fool."

"Mr. Wall, I will not listen to such talk," she spoke up, spiritedly.

"Oh, yes, you will," he flashed, striding over to her horse. "You're not in an English drawing room now, confronted by a disrespectful butler. You're in Utah, girl. And I am Jim Wall."

"That last is obvious, to my regret," she returned coldly. "Will you please be so kind as to tighten my cinches? It will be the last service I shall require of you."

"Thank the Lord!" ejaculated Jim, in grim heartiness. "All the same I'll tell you. If you were an American tenderfoot, it wouldn't be hard to make you understand. If you were western, you would not need to be told. But as an English lady of quality, who thinks her class will protect her anywhere you need to be jarred. . . . It's wrong for you to ride around alone on this range like any wild tomboy."

"Why?"

"Some of these men might kidnap you for ransom."

"Nonsense," she retorted, contemptuously.

"What do you say, Miss Herrick, when I tell you that Hank Hays has been watching you from the ridges, riding the lonely trails, biding his chance to waylay you?"

She paled at that. "I don't believe it," she said, presently.

"And you'll go on riding alone when it suits your royal fancy?" he queried witheringly.

"That is no longer any concern of yours," she replied, at last stung. "But I certainly shall ride when and how I please."

"Then you're as big a fool as your brother," declared Jim hotly. "Here I am, the only man in this Star outfit with honesty enough to tell you the truth. And I get insulted and fired for my pains."

She sat her horse mute. Jim laid a strong hand on her pommel and shook it.

"Your saddle's loose. Will you oblige me by getting off?"

"I can ride it back," she replied, icily.

"But your blanket will slip out. The saddle might turn with you."

She removed her foot from the stirrup. "Tighten the cinches then—and hurry."

Jim complied expeditiously enough, but in doing so he accidentally touched her. Something like fire shot through him at the contact. Under its stimulus he looked up to say a few more words to her, words to mitigate his offense and protest his sincerity. But they were never uttered. She had bent over to fasten a lace of her boot, and when Jim raised his head it was to find his face scarcely a foot from her red lips. Without a thought, in a flash, he kissed them, and then drew back, stricken.

"But I Certainly Shall Ride When and How I Please."

"How dare you!" she cried, in incredulous amazement and anger. "It just happened. I—I don't know—"

She swung her leather quirt and struck him across the mouth. The blood spurted. The leap of Jim's fury was as swift. He half intercepted a second blow, which stung his neck, and snatching the quirt from her hand he flung it away. Then his iron clutch fastened in her blouse. One lunge dragged her out of the saddle. He wrapped his other arm around her and bent her back so quickly that when she began a furious struggle it was too late.

His mouth had pressed on hers stilled any but smothered cries. There was a moment's wrestling. She was no weakling, but she was in the arms of a maddened giant. Repeatedly he kissed her lips, long, hard, passionate kisses.

Suddenly she collapsed heavily in his arms. The shock of that—its meaning—pierced Wall with something infinitely more imperious and staggering than bitter wrath. He let go of her. There was blood on her lips and cheeks; otherwise her face was like alabaster.

"I think I must have been in love with you—and wanted to protect you from men worse than myself," he went on, huskily. "I hope this will be a lesson to you. . . . Your brother was crazy to come here—easier to let you come. Go home! Go before it's too late. Make him go. He will be ruined shortly."

She wiped the blood from her cheeks, and then shudderingly from her lips—

"You—did that—to frighten me?" she presently whispered, in horror, yet as if fascinated by something looming.

"Get on your horse and ride ahead of me," he ordered, curtly. "Now, Miss Helen Herrick, one last word—Don't tell your brother what I did to you till after I'm gone. . . . If you do I'll kill him!"

She left a glove lying on the ground. Jim made no effort to recover it. His horse had grazed a few paces away, and when he had reached him and mounted Miss Herrick was in her saddle. Jim let her get a few rods in advance before he followed.

The excess of his emotion wore off, leaving him composed, and sternly glad the issue had developed as it had. The situation had become intolerable for him. It mocked him that he had actually desired to appear well in the eyes of this girl. How ridiculous that one of a robber gang should be vain! But he was not conscious that being a thief made any difference in a man's feeling about women. He knew that he could not command respect or love; but that in no wise inhibited his own feelings. Strange, he had indeed fallen in love with Helen Herrick.

She rode on slowly down the ridge without looking to right or left. Her gaze appeared to be lowered.

The ranch-house came in sight. Miss Herrick saw it and halted a moment, to let Jim catch up with her.

"Can you be gentleman enough to tell me the truth?" she asked.

"I have not lied to you," replied Jim.

"That—that first time you kissed me—was it honestly unpremeditated?"

"Miss Herrick, I don't know what to swear by. But, yes, I have. My mother! I swear by memory of her that I never dreamed of insulting you—I looked up. There your face was close. Your lips red! And I kissed them."

They went on for perhaps ten paces, as far as the road, before she spoke again. "I believe you," she said, without a tremor of the rich, low voice, though it was evident her emotion was deeply stirred. "Your action was inexcusable, unforgivable. But I should not have struck you with the whip. . . . That, and your passion to frighten me, perhaps justified your brutality. . . . I shall not tell. . . . Don't leave Star ranch."

For an instant Jim felt as if he were upon the verge of a precipice. But her change from revulsion to inscrutable generosity called to all that was good within him.

"Miss Herrick, I'm sorry, but I must leave," he replied, sadly. "I'm only a wandering rider—a gunslinger and—a member of a gang of robbers. And I was mad enough to fall in love with you. . . . Forget it. . . . Go home to England. But if you won't do that—never ride out alone again."

He spurred his horse and galloped down the road, by the barns and across the court, into the lane that led along the brook. Suddenly he espied a compact group of mounted riders coming down the road beyond Hays' cabin. Smoky's outfit.

Presidential Electors

Once Had More Privilege

Presidents and Vice Presidents of the United States who have been members of different political parties, but served together, included: President John Adams, Federalist, and Vice President Thomas Jefferson, Republican; President Andrew Jackson, Democrat, and Vice President John C. Calhoun, Republican.

In the early days Presidential electors were not bound by political party pledges, but were free to vote as they wished. After the amendment of 1804, selections of Presidents and Vice Presidents were made on separate vote, the result being that it could and did happen they were sometimes members of different political parties.

The germ of the Democratic party is to be found in the anti-Federalists, who opposed the adoption of a federal Constitution. A moderate party, led by Jefferson and Madison, recognized the need of a stronger central government than the articles of confederation afforded, and were alarmed at the centralized tendency manifested by Hamilton and the Federalist party. To this moderate party was given the name of Republicans, about 1792. During the French revolution extreme sympathizers with the new French republic formed so-called "democratic clubs," the fundamental principles advocated by these clubs being equalitarianism and the extreme of liberty for the individual. Though not in complete accord with the Republicans, adherents of these views were forced to act in harmony with the Republicans in opposition to the Federalist measures, and were eventually absorbed by the party which came to be known as the Democratic-Republican, the later official designation of the Democratic party.—Indianapolis News.

Endemic Typhus Disease

Carried by Common Mite

The source of endemic typhus contagion was first established by the public health service in 1920, with experiments on rats captured about Baltimore warehouses, in a district where the disease had been prevalent. Hitherto the disease had been confused with the European fever, which is usually spread by body lice in army camps, jails and crowded slums.

The public health service doctors found that the American form, which often broke out in sanitary homes, was spread by rat fleas, that the fleas transmitted the virus from rat to rat and that fleas who fed on the infected rats gave it to humans. Since then Department of Agriculture scientists have found it may also be transmitted by a common mite which infests rats.

The fight against these mammal-insect carried diseases, a comparatively new class of fevers which has come into prominence in the past few years, now is one of their major problems. They include the dreaded spotted fever. Endemic typhus is a milder malady than the European typhus, but still it has a mortality rate of 25 to 35 per cent when it breaks out in areas of undernourished and crowded conditions.

It is estimated that the Norway rat alone—which may have been brought to North America on the open ships of the Norsemen—causes an annual damage in the United States of approximately $250,000,000, or close to $2 per person.

The Lesson-Sermon also includes passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, one of which reads: "It is not well to imagine that Jesus demonstrated the divine power to heal only for a select number or for a limited period of time, since to all mankind and in every hour, divine Love supplies all good" (p. 494).
